Summary

There are some new vaccines that we've been involved with and those a've really gotten out. Education's been a lot tougher. We've done some good curriculum and done some things for tutoring and kids getting feedback. We don't have at the drop out raid, the graduation preparedness. It's not as good as we want it to be. There's always ways to innovate and take and innovate in another field but isth the cooperation.

In general, is Jas sort of a new way of framing it, but I have to ask if you are swinging for the fences, what if you miss?

Well, hopefully a you get more than one.

Speaker 2 : Swing either at the same problem like I, knew multiple malaria vaccine construct, so that o, if you have two or three that combine chance of success much higher or that you're working in multiple areas, not just one area in n climate, for example, have a company. That's a trying to make a nuclear actor. That would be very cheap and that would have safety so that the public would be very accepting of it.

Now you know even I realize that's high risk of knowing less than fifty percent chance. All that comes together and yet ah, if it did and the only reason I'm involved is, it would really help with climate a let us generate electricity without any greenhouse gases. I've a quote from you on climate from the annual letter, an I think it's pretty is.

Speaker 1 : I read quotes back to people from their own speeches a lot, but this is something you wrote. Tackling climate changes are going to demand historic levels of global cooperation. Is that I guess one of the biggest challenges of climate change, an there's, always ways to innovate and take and innovate um another field but isth the cooperation.
